Maternal Mortality Rate and Geography: Faulty roads, Low Traffic Vehicles, and Insecurity, Challenges in Afghanistan depend on Afghanistan

Background Afghanistan is located in Central Asia. It borders on Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan, and Tajikistan in the North, in the West on Iran, and on Pakistan in the East. Afghanistan also shares borders with a narrow branch of China in the North-East.

Maternal mortality rate in Afghanistan is high. The main causes are lack of access to health services, poor nutrition, and lack of skilled birth attendants. The Ministry of Health is working to improve maternal health services.

Geography is a major challenge for Afghanistan. The country is landlocked and has a mountainous terrain. This makes it difficult to transport goods and services, especially in rural areas.

Low traffic vehicles and insecurity are also major challenges. Poor roads and a lack of public transport make it difficult for people to access health services. Insecurity, particularly in rural areas, further hinders access to healthcare.
