

Egyptian army kills 12 militants, arrests 92 amid fresh Sinai operation

Egyptian security forces have killed 12 Takfiri militants and captured 92 others as part of an ongoing military offensive in the northeastern Sinai Peninsula, in a statement issued on Monday, the Egyptian army said. The latest operation, which came during heavy gun battles, brought to 28 the number of the militants killed since the launch of Operation Sinai 2018 on Friday. The Egyptian army has also bombed 16 militant positions in the region. The objective of the major operation – involving Egyptian forces in the army, air force and the navy – is to tighten control of its border points and “close up areas where there are terrorist hotbeds,” according to the army. In November, President Abdel Fattah el-Sisi had instructed the country’s armed forces to end the Daesh-inspired insurgency in Sinai Peninsula within three months, after a brutal mosque attack killed over 300 people. Sisi, who is preparing to seek a second term in the upcoming presidential election in March, has ordered the army to use “all available force” to eradicate the terrorist. The Sinai Peninsula has been under a state of emergency since October 2014, after a deadly militant attack left 33 Egyptian soldiers dead. AP
