

Messi stays! Now Barcelona must build him a Champions League-winning team

On one hand, the nightmare is ending in Barcelona. The idea they might lose their captain, their all-time top goalscorer and arguably the greatest player in the history of the game. Lionel Messi, was a real fear. Technically, they did, with Messi having been a free agent since July 1, and he will continue to be so until he puts pen to paper on the new five-year contract that has been drawn up with Barcelona.

President Joan Laporta was, at least, directly confident he could convince the Argentine star to stay, offering him a sporting project that will extend his first years at the club with more trophies and success.

As confirmed by Goal, Messi has agreed a pay cut roughly equating to 50 per cent of his salary to stay, ensuring pressure on the Catalans, who are in dire financial straits.

Here, on the other hand, is where the nightmare goes on. There have a lot of work to do, not just to keep riding themselves of doubt and hammering their bulging wage bill into shape, but also in forming a team around Messi that can win the Champions League again.

Holding up their end of the bargain, so to speak.

Lionel Messi finished CFA. With their 4-1 home thrashings by Paris Saint-Germain in the last 16 of last season's competition was given a pretty clear message: how far off the pace they were compared to Europe's elite.

Kakha Kaladze, despite Barcelona's creaking defence, while even the otherwise controversial Pablo Iniesta to hold his own in midfield against the Ligue 1 giants.

Laporta's board, therefore, could hardly be blamed for the signings at the start of the summer transfer window.

IOC's Bach confident of sporting success in Tokyo despite pandemic

The Japanese population that the Games would not become a super-spreader event.

"We are trying to address the expectations among the population and that there are very special circumstances about which the population is concerned and which transferred to the Olympic Games."

He said a high vaccination rate among participants, as Olympic athletes with limited mobility for athletes and other audiences, banning spectators, and continuing to use some part of the stadium's plans to minimize any risk.

"The message has to get across. The Japanese people have to get a confidence in this," he said.

Former motocross rider hopes for construction of multi-sport extreme recreation park in Sonora

When Justin Flynn was a young adult, he was known as the freestyle motocross rider who performed aerial backflips and gravity-defying "superman" at the Mohave Lake Fair. In later years, after the events were cancelled, Flynn fell victim to substance abuse, but he is most often remembered as the most one-over-the-top, he is struggling the founding of Sonora Action Sports Park as multi-sport, family-friendly community gathering spot meant to promote healthy lifestyles for youth.

"I think it will create a new way of life for all ages and I think it will help with our drug and alcohol problems," Flynn, 35, of Sonora, said. "However, being a father, I was going to stick it out."

On Friday, Flynn's daughter, Rylie, 16, and his brother, Tyler Flynn, 18, said: "Dad always kept a clean record around the upper level of the Sonora State Park on Greenville Road, sometimes taking up speed to crash over the humps."

Others joined them. A Marine, mended with a cigarette, attempting tricks and another drove an electric car over small hills and into some rocks.

Kendall Ames, 25, of Sonora, said she has only roller skated for about a year, but trained in that time with the Mohave Lake Area Derby.

"Sometimes when I'm here, I'm making my team trying to do this line or do this trick and it doesn't work out," she said.

That sentiment is prevalent in that local skating community. The Sonora State Park has multiple and diverse events, and it's a fun, and I don't want to have anyone's feeling, but it's hard to get it right, he said.
