UAE COVID-19 trial: Almost all children had virus antibodies after Sinopharm vaccine

A COVID-19 trial among adolescents in the United Arab Emirates showed almost all children who received two doses of the Chinese-made Sinopharm vaccine generated antibodies against the deadly virus, health officials have said.

The country's National Crisis and Emergency Management Authority (NCEMA) announced the results of the trial on 900 children during a press briefing on Tuesday. Some members of the trial, who were initially the intended target of the trial.

It found that 90 percent of children vaccinated with Sinopharm developed a good level of antibodies, while only a minor number of teenagers who received the dose experienced side effects from the vaccine.

Three minor symptoms were similar to those experienced with other childhood vaccinations such as pain at the injection site, but no serious side effects were reported, the health body said.

Among the total vaccinated children, 27 percent experienced pain at the place of injection, eight percent experienced headaches and 1.7 percent experienced fever or high temperature.

These symptoms and side effects usually faded very quickly, the trial found.

"Vaccine safety is considered high for children between three to 17 years old, as there have been no positive cases for children who have received the vaccine," NCEMA said.

It was also announced on Tuesday that the UAE's main contract testing app - the AI Flow app - has been revamped with new features.

Syrian Observatory reports explosion on merchant ship anchored in Latakia's port

An unknown explosion has damaged one of the merchant ships anchored in Syria's port of Latakia, which led to human and material losses, the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights reported on Tuesday evening.

Last week, two crew members, British and a Romanian, were killed when a petroleum products tanker managed by Israeli-owned Zofia Maritime came under attack.

An unnamed senior Israeli official blamed Iran for the attack and said that the ship was hit with a drone, according to Israel's Channel 13 TV.

In April, at least three people had been killed in an attack on an Iranian ship that took off the Syrian coast, the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said.

including two members of the crew, in the attack, which sparked a fire, said Rami Abdel Rahman, head of the Britain-based non-governmental agency SANA, quoted the oil minister "what was believed to be an attack by a drone from the direction of Lebanese waters."

Flanked by the commanders of the armed forces, Bolsonaro stood outside the Planalto presidential palace as the military parade passed by. A Navy officer in command gave a thumbs up to the army to hand him the invitation.

The sight of tanks by the presidential palace unsettled Brazilians who lived under the 1964 to 1985 military dictatorship.

Lieutenant Arthur Lima, the speaker of the lower chamber of Congress, called the military parade ahead of a crucial vote a "tragic contradiction," and he did not accept an invitation to attend the annual event.

Other politicians said the annual military presence in front of the presidential palace was meant to intimidate them.

"Bolsonaro has turned a military training exercise into a political spectacle," said left-wing Congresswoman Pricilla Kassinis, calling it a show of force in reaction to his dropping poll numbers.

"This show will backfire," she wrote on social media.

Political scientist Mauricio Santoro of Rio de Janeiro State University told the AFP news agency that Bolsonaro was using the tank parade "to try to intimidate Congress and the Supreme Court."

He wants to show the armed forces are on his side.

Additional armed forces were on his side.

A small crowd of Bolsonaro supporters also attended, some carrying signs calling for the military to intervene to "save Brazil".
